Sue Heycox, Aboriginal Liaison Officer, UnitingCare Ageing

My current employment with UnitingCare only commenced in August '08. I have a broad background towards working with our Aboriginal people and communities of the South Eastern Region. UnitingCare has had a very strong impact more so now to working with my people aged, disabilities, families and communities.

I feel very strong towards the way that UnitingCare have given back to our communities a delivery of services that are so broad with humanity, caring, sharing and dignity whilst also empathy to our culture and the willingness to learn the cultural difference towards the way we work and share the family caring around our people.

My future in UnitingCare is now being given an opportunity to share with and organisation my past experience of working with Aboriginal people aged and disabled. Finally, UnitingCare is in a process of offering training to all our staff for the future that will enable our people to care for our communities.
